*the soul
of

"As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings: So the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him" (Deut. 32:11-12).

Oswald Spengler, in his Decline of the West, made the following observation: "... if we are to enquire into the sense of history, we must begin by solving a question which has never yet been put, viz., for whom is there History?" The word "history" is of course, the formal record of the past in respect of human affairs, but it is also certain prescribed events arising out of the Sovereignty of the Almighty God as these remain unfulfilled. History does thus not only belong to those who made it in the past, but to those who will make it in the future.

What will future history record? Over the past three centuries, world history has been written by the Anglo-Celto-Saxon and kindred European nations whose impact on the world has been such that no other record of achievement can rival this. The opportunity to climax the long history of human struggle with the demonstration of a God-centred way of life was certainly there, but now even tears of remorse cannot express the tragedy of lost opportunity.

The 18th Century English poet, Abraham Cowley, expressed something of this failure when he wrote of "words that weep and tears that speak" which could have to do with the words which the Lord God spoke to the Patriarchs by way of Promise. With "eagle's wings" He bore them and gave them everything that was needed to accomplish His Purpose in the earth and yet His People have squandered the Gifts of God by placing theology above the Theocracy and in the anguish of their choice, the soul of the nation pours out its tears.

OUR COVER: Invariably, pictures tell their own story, but the Front Cover this month serves as a reminder, recalling the Malay superstition among the coloureds at Kalk Bay in the Cape.

The story is told of one Gamat who owned a fishing boat and whose fishing expertise was renowned throughout Kalk Bay. After an exceptionally fine catch, his wife, Radiwa, selected the best for the use of the household and proceeded to salt and dry the fish — hanging them in the most advantageous place. One night, the most select of the drying fish was stolen and on the following night another and although the losses were reported to the police, the culprit could not be found and Radiwa decided to call in the services of a dukun (a sorcerer). Having listened to the story, the dukun sat down under the line where the remaining fish were drying and began fumbling in a small white bag muttering in Arabic and apparently staring at the horizon. After a while, he arose and merely said: “He will come once more, for the last time”, and true to this saying, a few days later another “snoek” disappeared with Radiwa going to the dukun and telling him. The dukun then took Radiwa to the harbour and after studying the chattering crowd pointed to a man whom Radiwa knew and indicated that he was the culprit but before Radiwa could move to accuse the man, the dukun told her to leave him alone as he had paid for his guilt. As the guilty man moved away, it was seen that he walked on his toes and even as an old man, his heels never again touched the ground when he walked.

This and other strange features characterise the different races of men and while we may puzzle over them, this is as far as our involvement should be.

THE TIME OF DECISION

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow once wrote:

“Decide not rashly. The decision made can never be recalled. The gods implore not, solicit not; they only offer choice and occasion, which once being passed return no more. Dost thou accept the gift?”

Masque of Pandora. Tower of Prometheus on Mount Caucasus.

Over the past four hundred years, the Anglo-Celto-Saxon and Kindred European nations have made many decisions and today's history — indeed today's contemporary scene — is a reflection of choices made and decisions taken. Many, of course, are of the opinion that “... all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose...” (Rom. 8:28) and from which it may be inferred that so long as one expresses a love for God, all choices and decisions will ultimately turn out for the better. Unfortunately, this is not so and one has only to consider the World Council of Churches and its sponsorship of Marxist terrorism to realise that the above quoted principle for Christian action leaves much to be desired.

The Lord Jesus Christ said: “If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love” (John 15:10) and it does not take much reading to realise that He had a very severe indictment for those who “shall break the least of these commandments, and shall teach men so” (Matt. 5:19). One does not “love God” by breaking His Commandments nor can one expect to have the Divine Benediction placed on the people who were called to His Service (Isa. 48:12) if they failed to live according to His Directives. So then, the only time, the only time when “all things work together for good” is when the LORD'S true Covenant People get themselves fairly and squarely into line with the Law of the LORD.

Unfortunately, the true modern company of Israel nations are following religious doctrines which are dominated by “grace” as a substitute for the LORD'S Law and over the past four hundred years — since the Bible was delivered from Papal exclusivity — decisions were taken against either political or emotional motives. In considering today's situation, few will surely claim that all past decisions have worked together for the good of the Anglo-Saxon company of nations nor, for that matter, on other people on whom we have squandered our Christian concept of “good”.

Now, one should not think that because we, as the modern development of the true Covenant People have decided to “go it on our own” — allowing our individual and national conscience to be our guide — that the LORD has accepted this situation and has no further interest in what happens. This could not be further from the truth because, whether we accept it or not, whether we like it or not, our modern company of nations are inextricably involved with the Honour and Integrity of the Name of the Lord and His Plan for world rehabilitation (Gen. 12:3; Num. 6:27; Isa. 48:11,12). This feature is clearly demonstrated if we consider events which took place as the Reformation era began to dawn and as the true Covenant People became exposed to the Bible which they could now study for themselves without fear of priestly denunciations.

However, the LORD foreknew that His People would continue to tread the same path as had been used for almost fifteen hundred years in which priestly interpretation rather than the Word Itself, was the order of the day. People would be reluctant to read and study for themselves and in many cases, would be totally ignorant of what the “Law and the Prophets” had to say — these being considered as “Jewish Scriptures” in contradistinction to the New Testament which was considered as “the Christian Scriptures”. To overcome the prejudice against the “Law and the Prophets”, the LORD created an additional means whereby, despite themselves, His people would hear the “Law and the Prophets” and perhaps see that His Directive for them today is as valid as when they were in possession of Canaan.

This means was, of course, the Book of Common Prayer which was prepared primarily by Thomas Cranmer who became Archbishop of Canterbury in 1533. Although having undergone several revisions, the table of lessons or daily readings has remained virtually the same and as we look at these, while it may be coincidental, the scriptures appointed to be read on days of decision have, in several cases turned out to be a specific Directive from the LORD. Now, one should not think of the Book of Common Prayer as a “fortune-telling Book” — it does, however, provide a scripture reading which may be seen as having a bearing on decisions which could have far-reaching effects. On October 28th, 1971, when the British Parliament voted on Britain’s European Economic Community membership, the first reading for that day was Isaiah 28:9-17 in which a warning against making a “covenant with death” occurs and as we have seen, while Britain still has Parliamentary sovereignty, its involvement with Europe has economic strings which could be associated with the “covenant with death”. During the negotiations in the Rhodesian issue, the same feature was evident and each step of the way, if one followed the prescribed reading for the day, could be seen as a positive directive against the determination to hand the country to Black majority rule. Despite those warnings, it happened and in a country renamed “Zimbabwe” the White Israel people are now learning what the LORD meant when through Moses, He said: “. . . thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother” (Deut. 17:15).

On the 2nd of November, 1983, South Africans are being asked to make a decision — whether to accept or to reject the Government’s new Constitutional proposals and on that day, the first lesson to be read is Deuteronomy 9, verse 25 through chapter 10 and verse 6. The theme in this day’s reading is the recapitulation by Moses of the events which took place while he was on the Mount receiving the Law of the LORD and Israel’s creation of and the serving of the “molten calf” — a national demonstration that Israel rejected its separated status and lapsed into the way of Egypt which was as cosmopolitan as are most Israel nations today. As Moses told the story, he said that the LORD was about to destroy the people but through his — Moses’ — intercession, recalling the LORD’S Promise and Covenant with the patriarchs, the LORD withheld His hand and offered the people a second chance to follow His Law — with the Ten Commandments given a second time and the nation given the chance to live by these. There is a strange parallel when one thinks of it, between what is being offered to South Africans on the 2nd of November — are we to be as Israel in that day when our forebears decided to follow the way of Egypt or are we to face the future, trusting in the Word of the LORD and His Law as our national Constitution? We are told that unless we do vote for the new dispensation embodied in the new Constitution, South Africa will be faced with confrontation and possibly economic chaos, but we are not told what will happen if we choose to follow the LORD and His Law which says an emphatic NO to what is being put before us. The LORD our God Promises blessing for obedience but to those who would lead God’s people into the way of Egypt, one can only say: “It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God” (Heb. 10:31).

The LORD Bless and Keep you,

The Covenant Message

WHAT IS IT ALL ABOUT ?

The articles in this magazine are designed to show the reality of society in the Anglo-Celto-Saxon and Kindred European nations as it is - as opposed to what it could be. The present conditions have arisen because the people whom we identify as true Israel, have departed from the conditions of the LORD'S Covenant. In this, He created a NATION, He endowed it with PROMISES, and gave it STATUTES and JUDGMENTS as its NATIONAL CONSTITUTION. The record of history shows the consequences of national departure from that CONSTITUTION and the current situation in Anglo-Saxondom is a continuation of those consequences. It is the aim of the articles in this magazine to present the REALITY of the LORD'S Covenant by showing the society in which you live as opposed to that which could be, if the nation and the individual accepted their responsibility and lived as the LORD Directed.

WHO SHOULD RULE?

by W.G. Finlay

Notwithstanding a certain amount of grumbling and dissatisfaction over various pieces of legislation which, from time to time, take their toll of what is perceived as liberty, generally there is an acceptance of the structure of government within the Western world, a structure which is the by-product of what is called Democracy — a system purporting to be the expression of the will of the majority as to who should administer the affairs of the country — always provided that the Constitution remains the machinery around which administration takes place. Constitutions can of course always be changed if the politicians consider this expedient! And the will of the majority can be manipulated.

However, within the democratic system representatives are still elected on the basis of either a promised future performance — in terms of the Constitution — or on past allegiance. In other words, politicians are still trusted to administer the machinery which reflects the image of the nation but even a brief glance at what is projected on the world scene today by the various governments in Anglo-Saxondom, reveals that nothing is quite as clear-cut or precise. The entire governmental system has become indistinct and featureless, uncertain and distorted — and to such an extent that the repeated demands for all national sovereignty to be destroyed is more than a possibility.

A Subtle Change

When Abraham Lincoln spoke at Gettysburg in 1863 he spoke of “this nation under God” — an emphasis which is generally lacking in modern political speeches and it is not surprising that the concept of national dignity has largely disappeared. Indeed, the word nation has been replaced by the word people. One hears of the British people and not the British nation and as an examination of these two words as defined in the dictionary will reveal, the political thinking of those who represent the nation becomes ominous indeed. And — a distinct assault on what the LORD said when He assured that “the seed of Israel would be a nation before Him forever”.

The English word nation is derived from the Latin NATIO which the Lewis and Short's Latin Dictionary defines as: “birth, a breed, stock, kind or race.” In other words, a distinct race characterised by common descent, language and history. Most dictionaries give the above as the primary meaning but also provide a secondary meaning which implies a people, irrespective of their origins who consent to live together within a specific geographical area and under a single Constitution. Of this word people it will be noted that it is a general term which separates the human species from the animal kingdom. Thus, the modern emphasis on the word people rather than nation, reveals precisely what is taking place. Anglo-Saxondom is no longer made up of separate identifiable nations reflecting the image of one race but is becoming the by-product of a racial amalgam even though history has shown that such an admixture was the downfall and demise of the nations of antiquity.

Unquestionably Western politicians must accept the major responsibility — they are elected as the custodians of the nation and truly honourable men would place the nation and its continuity above all political and party considerations. No doubt the politicians will claim they receive a mandate from the people and therefore, if any blame is to be attached, it lies with the electorate. In turn, the electorate in Anglo-Saxondom, professing to be Christian, will excuse themselves on the authority of Paul and his advice to submit themselves to higher powers who receive their authority to rule from God. No one bothers to explain or even consider the impossibility of the Almighty placing His Benediction on any institution or government which brings discredit to His Holy Name. It is inconceivable that He would authorise or sanction any legislation which nullified His Integrity as this is bound up with “the seed of Israel” being a nation before Him for ever.

The current process of transforming God’s “company of nations” into a company of heterogeneous people is diametrically opposed to all that the LORD did in creating the Israel nation. The NATIO — of one birth, breed, stock, kind and race.

The Validity of Leadership

Anglo-Saxons or Israelites — who are not and never have been the Jewish people — are what has been called the Northern race today living in many parts of the world. And tragically, it is a race which has thoughtlessly wasted its strength by allowing others to usurp its role and its heritage. Thus the race now finds itself in such a position that many despair of its continued survival.

Writing of this situation in his work, The Ideal And Destiny, Richard McCulloch maintains that this racial collapse would not have been possible without a prior breakdown in racial leadership and that the situation will never be corrected without a prior restoration of such leadership in its true and proper form.

“The Northern race must question the validity of leadership institutions which are leading it to extinction. Protection is an indispensable and inseparable condition of true and proper leadership. Those who would presume to lead a race must first protect it. If they are unable and unwilling to protect then they cannot lead. The pseudoaristoi who pose as the leadership class... have utterly failed to protect it and must surrender leadership to those willing and capable of exercising its duties and responsibilities no less than its prestige. The reason for their failure, whether religion, ideology, philosophy, one-dimensional plutocratic materialism, lack of intellectual ability, lack of energy, dedication, and will-power required to lead the fight, or any other current maladies to which they have proven no more immune than others of their kind, is irrelevant to the fact that they have failed and proven themselves unworthy of the leadership position. Most have followed the easy path of least resistance, but too many have been active racial traitors sickly turning their decadent energies against their own kind while exploiting the prestige of their aristocratic position.”

Turning back the pages of the history of our race — whether one calls this Anglo-Saxon, Northernkind or Israel — to the time of Moses it will be recalled that he told the children of Israel that the Word of the LORD was not hidden; that it was not unattainable but was something that had been made known so that the nation could perform its commission by demonstrating, in the sight of other nations, the blessing which comes from obedience to His Word. The Sovereign had declared His Will, His Constitution and His subjects were to adhere to this.

However, the LORD is Omniscient — knowing all things — and He foreknew that the time would come and a situation arise when Israel would demand a king like the surrounding nations and while He accepted this would be so, He ensured that such a king would act only as a vice-regent with no authority to invalidate the Constitution under which the Kingdom was to be administered. Thus: “When thou art come unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and dwell therein, and shalt say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me; Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the LORD thy God shall choose: one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee: thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother...” Interrupting this quotation from Deuteronomy 17, two points need clarification. The first, the rather strange phrase in verse 15 — “Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee...” In the literal translation of the Massoretic text this reads: “You may certainly appoint a king” — which is not a specific command to establish a monarchy but it is permission.

The second point is self-explanatory: “...thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother. The New English Bible rendering this: “You shall appoint over you a man of your own race; you must not appoint a foreigner, one who is not of your own race...” Thus the LORD permitted but did not command the establishment of a monarchy or government and although permission was granted, the choice limited the appointment to those of the same race. This qualified permission by the Lord to Israel positively refutes any suggestion of the universality of man as taught by the churches and politicians today. And if all men are equal and if all have the same perception of what is right and what is wrong, why should the LORD God be so “unChristian” as to insist that if the people wanted a king, they should be “racists” and discriminate against all other races by excluding them from the position of king in Israel? It will be recalled that on being given the Law, Israel did not question a single facet of it because, having been educated by experience, they knew their National Constitution was a safeguard against a repetition of many of their previous experiences. In the context of living under the authority of one not of their own race, Israel had experienced this when a Pharaoh rose who “knew not Joseph”. So there was no howl of protest, no questioning and no argument whatsoever — the restriction against the “stranger” was accepted as a logical directive from the LORD.

Rules of Leadership

Turning back to Deuteronomy 17 and to verse 16, it will be noted that there are several conditions imposed upon any who were appointed to leadership. “But he shall not multiply horses unto himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the LORD hath said unto you, ye shall henceforth return no more that way. Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold. And it shall be, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom that he shall write him a copy of this Law in a book... And it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear the LORD his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes and to do them: That his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aside from the commandment, to the right hand, or to the left: to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he, and his children, in the midst of Israel.”

There are several points in the above quotation which should be enlarged on such as the rather strange prohibition not to “multiply horses” and particularly strange because neither Egypt nor lower Mesopotamia was known as the home of the horse even though Pharaoh had imported horses to draw his chariots. What is known however, is that the earlier kings, whether Egyptian, Babylonian or Canaanite, had horses in direct proportion to the strength of their military establishments. Indeed, the mark of their military strength lay in the number of their horses. Thus the king in Israel was not to cherish military ambitions and aspire to subordinate other nations through military conquest.

This naturally had nothing to do with the defence of one's homeland or the suppression of evil. Military preparedness being fully set out in Numbers 26:2 and Deuteronomy 20. National service was a national duty. Further, the king was not permitted to enhance his own political ambitions or increase his silver and gold while the prohibition against the multiplicity of wives was to prevent him being turned away from the Lord. Later Solomon showed how important this was for it was through his disobedience that the nation was divided and ultimately expelled from the land.

Mention should be made here too of the Levites who were involved with the Law which had absolutely nothing to do with sacrifices and priestly ritual. An examination of Deuteronomy 17 will show that the first verse is totally out of place for it deals with sacrifice whereas the remainder of the twenty verses deal with matters of a political nature and in which, JUDGMENT, usually reserved for civil courts, is very much to the fore. The Levites are seen as adjudicators having custody of the Constitution which set out prescribed penalties for specific crimes. They were not priests but rather administrators as is implied in the Hebrew word KOHEN and, as civil servants, they were to be concerned with the implementation of those things in the Law of the LORD. Thus, when the king was required to have an exact replica of the Law with him at all times, it was the responsibility of the Levites to ensure that this was so and the king, in his role of chief administrator, was duty bound to enforce the Law — indeed not only the Levites but the king had no power outside of the Law which was — and still is — the expression of the LORD'S WILL for His people.

The Beginning of National Decline

For many years the question of leadership remained dormant within Israel but gradually a situation arose when “every man did that which was right in his own eyes”. Reference to this being found in Judges 17:6; 18:1 and 21:5. It is interesting to note here that according to the Jewish Encyclopaedia, a critical examination of the record of the Book of Judges shows evidence of three hands at work compiling the record — an original account, a later priestly account and a final and much later attempt to reconcile the original with the priestly additions.

However, it is an incontestable fact that the time came when self-interest took precedence over both tribal and national interests and to prevent total chaos from destroying the nation, the LORD provided the Judges but despite this it was evident that eventually the LORD'S provision for kingship in Israel would come into play and finally, the demand was indeed made for a king. The record of this being found in 1st Samuel 8.

It is rather interesting to note what prompted the demand for in many ways it is similar to the present political situation. “And it came to pass when Samuel was old, that he made his sons judges over Israel. Now the name of his first born was Joel; and the name of his second, Abiah: they were judges in Beer-sheba, And his sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted justice. Then all the elders of Israel gathered themselves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah, And said unto him, Behold, thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways: now make us a king to judge us like all the nations.”

In demanding that Samuel provide a ruler without asking that he petition the LORD, the elders were actually demanding the abdication of the LORD. They were denying His Right to appoint those who would administer the Law in Israel. It was not a rejection of the Law — the fact that the elders made the demand against the background of the perversions of the Law by Samuel’s sons indicating this — but it was a demand for a personality who would be visible and who would justly apply the Law.

So a king was provided but at the same time the people were warned of the consequence of their act and what would happen when a king reigned over them. “This will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you: He will take your sons, and appoint them for himself, for his chariots and to be his horsemen; and some shall run before his chariots. And he will appoint him captains over thousands, and captains over fifties; and will set them to ear his ground, and to reap his harvest, and to make his instruments of war, and instruments of his chariots. And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers. And he will take your fields and your vineyards, and your oliveyards, even the best of them, and give them to his servants. And he will take the tenth of your seed, and of your vineyards, and give to his officers, and to his servants. And he will take your manservants, and your maid-servants, and your goodliest young men, and your asses, and put them to work, He will take the tenth of your sheep: and ye shall be his servants.

“And ye shall cry out in that day because of your king which ye shall have chosen you; and the LORD will not hear you in that day.”

This was the beginning of the loss of freedom within the nation. The strands of economic and political power which the king would grasp are very evident in the above quote and today, the power of money wielded by Western leaders and others is exercising a decisive and most malignant control over the nation.

“Nevertheless the people refused to obey the voice of Samuel; and they said, Nay, but we will have a king over us; That we may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles.”

And the result is the experience of the nation today in all its lands. Thus, it is essential that the quality of leadership within modern Israel should be closely examined for without true and loyal leaders almost final extinction of the race may well result. The task will not be easy but the value and importance of the effort carries a breathtaking vision of the future when THE WORD OF GOD will cause His people to not only listen and obey but know the peace which, under the Law of the LORD, will be theirs.

Meanwhile, there is much which must be done.■

It has been said.....

THAT a system which gives political decision-making power to those who represent the dependent, the least intelligent and those incapable of ruling their own lives in a responsible manner, much less guiding the future destinies of mankind, cannot possibly provide effective and positive leadership.

The following letter and accompanying article from Lt. Col., Archibald E. Roberts, Aus, ret., is reproduced here as it applies to all concerned people everywhere. The time has come for a more positive action and for less apology concerning the things we all believe in; the time has come for informing others even if at times they reject the information. Sooner or later, the seed sown will bear fruit.

A TIME OF CRISIS

Friends of Freedom,

The purpose of this letter is to present to you origins of the national crisis and reveal how men and women like you translate anger and frustration into practical operations to defend their money and property.

Here is the key to exposing and neutralising, "A Secret Government of Monetary Power", which, unless halted, will doom you and your descendants to a serf society on the land which once was yours. First, let's define a factor which may inhibit corrective action.

In the present climate of national emergency it appears that the greatest stumbling block to acceptance of necessary data for financial survival, and the conclusions which must be reached by the individual, is the feeling of "unreality" which the truth holds for the very people who seek it.

Impending economic/political disaster is permitted its fantastic rate of growth through no other factor as much as incredulity masked as apathy. The resulting inaction of the people is a powerful propellant to nihilistic doctrine.

It's not difficult to spot the results of successful manipulation of our emotions by the mattoid elite. Current phase of their method is an appeal to the intellect, presenting the case for a one-world government as the logical, rational and even the desired end.

The technique is as old as politics itself. It is the Hegelian principle of bringing about change in a three-step process: Thesis, Antithesis, and Synthesis.

First step, "thesis", is to create a problem. Second step, "antithesis", is to generate opposition to the problem (fear, panic and hysteria). Third step, "synthesis", is to offer a solution to the problem created in step one . . . change which would have been impossible to impose on the people without the psychological conditioning achieved by steps one and two.

Employing the Hegelian principle, artful madmen have created economic chaos, shortages of food and fuel, confiscatory taxation, a breakdown in the educational system, the threat of war and other diversions to condition us for the "New World Order".

Political theorising and attempts to grapple with the convoluted problems of the world is useless. The solution to national crisis is local and personal.

Only you can reverse the march toward a socialist state . . . and make a place for your children in tomorrow's world.

Knowledgeable response to crisis is, of course, more difficult than protest. But, protest alone will not defend your family, your money and your life. A vital first requirement for survival in a hostile political environment is identification of the men and the system which directs the course of your country to oblivion and her people to a soviet twilight zone.

Inform yourself of the truth, then act today to restore freedoms of person and property . . . inform others and work for the return of control of government to the people where it properly belongs.

Fraternally,

Archibald E. Roberts, Lt. Col., AUS, ret., Director
—The Committee to Restore the (U.S.A.) Constitution

SPECTATORSHIP vs PARTICIPATION

The political reality of today is the fact that after fifty years of "fighting communism" the great array of anti-communists have failed to deter the rising tide of revolution. Patriotic organisations still have no real strategy for effective action because of the failure to recognise the obvious: The real enemy of the people.

Conservative leaders must come to realise that a mattoid "elite", have seized control of policy-making and conflict-management. International financiers and industrialists in secret alliance with revolutionary forces, are merging Western and Soviet societies under a master plan of infiltration, subversion and rebellion.

Counterattack

General reaction of the muzzled majority to increasing exploitation and oppression has been a defence of the status quo. Yet, it must be clear that a political system perpetually on the defensive is doomed to ultimate defeat. Somewhere, somehow, we must counterattack!

The problem might be considered as basically one of inducing movement and action. Relatively few people in the West are pro-communist, or even socialists. Still, Revolutionaries in government retain an iron grip on domestic and foreign policy, manipulating economic, social and political disciplines to expand their dream of world empire at our expense.

Meanwhile, the vast majority of the people, both captives and targets, remain relatively passive.

This passivity is not accidental. World government conflict managers have long realised the significance of the vast gulf between spectators and participants. Their whole strategy is geared to maximise the victim's spectatorship and minimise his participation in the struggle.

Spectator Attitude

Lenin advised: "The majority of wars are only matters of spectatorship." He warned his followers against falling into "a spectator attitude". "Mere spectatorship", he warned, "leads inevitably to defeat". He pointed out that in any struggle, revolutionary or otherwise, really total commitment is limited. A small group with more participants will defeat a much larger group populated by spectators.

Practical application of the spectator-participant principle was demonstrated in the Second World War. Guerrilla combat was effective only with the active participation of the people.

Soviet general Sidor Kovpak, brilliant wartime guerrilla commander in the Ukraine, described the key to victory: "In partisan warfare, reliable and constant contact with the people means everything. Partisan warfare is inconceivable without the active support of the people."

The key word is active — not permissive or even passive sympathy — active!

That principle was shown in South Vietnam. It is estimated that out of every hundred people in rural areas, twenty were actively aiding the Communist Viet Cong, forty were passively anti-communist, and forty were neutral. That active twenty was enough to turn the country into a major battlefield leading to ultimate defeat of American forces — aided and abetted, of course, by concealed conflict managers in New York and Washington.

Plan of action

In contrast, fear has been the mattoid's chief weapon; economic, political and social coercion, for maximising passivity and spectatorship. Effective though it is, oppression is a two-edged weapon. Its application generates potential reaction. These suppressed reactions can explode with sudden violence. Channelling anger and frustration into constructive action is the task of knowledgeable people everywhere. The individual can do nothing to protect himself and his family until he is armed with knowledge and a plan of action.

Defeat of the mattoids now leading us all into the twilight zone of national disaster demands intelligent acceptance of the facts behind the crisis. And, it requires a courageous marshalling of resources, and the commitment of motivated citizens who will take whatever action is necessary to reverse the mindless march toward dictatorship.

We have clearly lost control of our government. The solution to economic chaos, social rebellion, and political revolution is planned action at the county level of government, the government closest to the people, to force the respective state legislatures to protect the lives and property of the people.

Responsible individuals must become active participants in the struggle for survival. Informed and motivated citizens will form the officer cadre for much larger forces which arise as the terror unfolds.

A Leadership Vacuum

“When a people have no leaders who uncompromisingly support their interests, but have only leaders who are acting against their long-range interests, their current leaders can be referred to as anti-leaders and a leadership vacuum can be said to exist. Northern Man now suffers from a leadership vacuum. The leaders of his political, intellectual, and cultural institutions are, almost without exception, acting contrary to his long-range interests. A leadership vacuum, like any vacuum, is subject to implosions of a very sudden nature. If true leaders were to arise, leaders who placed the best interest of Northernkind first in their hierarchy of values as opposed to the current anti-leaders who sacrifice the best interests of Northern Man in order to serve the interests, needs, and desires of other people we might witness a sudden implosion of the leadership vacuum which will sweep the anti-leaders from their current position of power over Northern Man. But the thought must precede the deed and pro-Northernkind ideas must precede the appearance of pro-Northernkind leaders.”

CAMEOS OF HISTORY

Chinese Gordon

At 3.30 a.m. on January 26, 1885 a hand-picked assault force of Ansar shock troops — fanatical dervishes and followers of the Mahdi — broke through the weakly held perimeter wall of Khartoum on the southern side of the fortress city and poured through the streets, killing and plundering as they went. Resistance from the starving and enfeebled garrison was minimal; by 4.00 a.m. the Mahdi's forces were in occupation of most of the city and the leading wave of troops had broken through into the grounds of the Governor's Palace. They swept through the ornamental shrubs and palm trees of the gardens, shrieking and yelling and waving their spears and then flooded across the stretch of ground that led to the stairs which ran up to the Governor's private apartments. And then they were suddenly brought up short by the appearance at the head of the stairs of a slight figure dressed in a white uniform and a tarbush. For a moment the cacophony of noise was hushed and the tribesmen stared in awe at the legendary figure of Gordon Pasha, Major General Charles George Gordon of Her Majesty's Royal Engineers, Governor General of the Sudan and a marshal of the Egyptian Army. The General stood there with relaxed calm, a look of scorn on his handsome face, one hand resting on the hilt of his sheathed sword, a revolver hanging negligently from the other; in these, his last moments, he made not the slightest effort to defend himself. Then the spell was broken and with a shout of "Oh cursed one your time has come," the leader of the rebels flung his spear at the motionless figure; it struck Gordon full in the chest, spinning him round so that he offered his back to the rest of the attackers who moved in, stabbing and chopping until the bloody, mangled corpse rolled to the bottom of the steps where, in accordance with tribal custom, the head was hacked off and the torso pitched contemptuously down a well.

So wrote Richard McCulloch in The Ideal and Destiny but meanwhile, who does rule today — aside from the government, the financiers, the multinational organisations, the United Nations and so on and so on? Without doubt: "The forces and 'ideas' which are working against Northernkind Man in all areas are so intricate, so entrenched in the structure of power, so firmly established in control, so complex and so seemingly endless and coming from all directions at once that they resemble a vast, massive, and cumbersome Gordian Knot serving as an obstacle to the realisation of the best interests of Northern Man, and frustrating by sheer complexity, scale, and the seeming hopelessness of the task all those who seek to remove the obstacle to promote those interests."

One facet of modern rulers aside from those already mentioned is organised crime with an interesting article appearing in the American Arkansas Gazette under the heading The Mob Has Become A League Of Nations. In July 1983, the United States Attorney for the Southern District called for the government to redouble its efforts against crime which call apparently upset a few people. And, stunned, perhaps, by this threat to his job, Emil Ciccetli, deputy chief of New York City's Organised Crime Control Bureau, warned that Cubans and Columbians, Rastafarians, Chinese, Israelis and Soviet Jews are as hard at work building Their Things, too.

What's to be made of this? Organised crime seems to be what America imports. So what is the point of smashing the Italian families who run New York — the Gambinos, Colombos, Genoveses, Bonannos and Lucheses — if they are to be replaced by Cubans, Columbians and Etceteras?

Discovering the Mafia

It took the FBI 50 years to figure out there is a Mafia, and that came about only because in 1957 it held a national convention in Appalachia, N.Y.

How long do you suppose it would take the American government to get a handle on what amounts to a regular League of Nations moving in on the turf currently occupied by traditional gangs? Besides, there seems to be very little evidence that The Mob as we know it is on the wane.

It is true enough that more than a dozen Mob bosses around the country have been done in by Federal prosecutors in the last three years. But they either continue running their operations while in jail or are succeeded by ambitious underlings. The government spends something like $100 million a year hounding the gangs. It is hard to believe that $200 million would put them out of business.

Consider the evidence. The New York City Police Department reported that New York's Big Five, while continuing to do well in gambling, loan sharking, narcotics and counterfeiting are also well entrenched in jewellery, clothing, garbage and toxic wastes, trucking, construction, entertainment, pizza parlours, funeral homes, restaurants, bars and organised labour.

The Mob evidently even regulates crime. When the Century Armoured Courier Company was knocked over for $11 million earlier this year by some gentlemen of Greek origin, the FBI reported that they first went to the Colombo family for permission and protection. And so long are the tentacles of New York mobsters, according to the Justice Department, that they control the garbage business all the way down in West Florida.

Americans know the union label those nice ladies in the television ads tell them to look for. According to a study prepared by New York State Senator, Franz Leichter, it may well read: "Thomas Gambino," whom, the senator says, "is building a virtual dynasty on Seventh Avenue."

Americans also know the brand new Fulton Fish Market that the government helped build in the new South Street Seaport. According to court documents filed by Federal investigators in February 1982, "Organised crime controls every facet of the Fulton Fish Market with virtual impunity."

It may be that the Mobs can be had. But the suspicion is that if and when that happens, it won't be the government that will get the job done. It will be the Colombians, the Cubans, the Rastafarians, the Chinese, the Israelis or the Soviet Jews.

How very true are the words of Richard McCulloch: Our people held the whole world in their unchallengeable grasp . . . after decades of acting against their own interests, of fighting amongst themselves in catastrophic wars, of moral and spiritual decline and the pursuit of self-destruction, they have lost control of the globe and have lost, or are losing, control and possession of their own homelands. Hemmed in by foes on the outside, and beset by even more dangerous foes on the inside, oppressed, occupied, dispossessed, and invaded, they are sorely pressed to hold or regain, control of their own destiny.

The suggestion is made that all this can be removed by better ideas. And possibly this is true if the ideas centre on a return to the Law of the Lord which alone can provide true Israel with "wisdom and understanding in the sight of the nations." Possibly this is something worth trying and not only in America. ●

The Piltdown 1 skull pieces.

IS IT TOO EASY TO CHEAT AT SCIENCE?

A recent book review by The Sunday Times, 17 July 1983, drew attention to a work Betrayers Of The Truth by William Broad and Nicholas Wade which attempts to show how people in general can be fooled on most subjects and especially on those which are propagated by the intellectuals who, if nothing else, are supposed to know more than the average man-in-the-street.

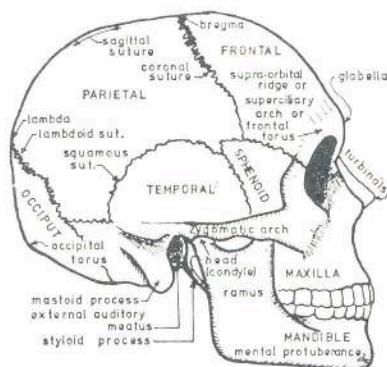

In this work, Isaac Newton is accused of "data massaging"; John Dalton, father of the atomic theory of doubtful experiments and significantly in this age of "the equality of man" so is Gregor Mendel the founder of genetics. His statistics are said to be "too good to be true".

However, and according to the book review, there has been scientific fraud in many cases and: "trimming", "cooking" and plain "forging" are three kinds of dishonesty as identified by the 19th-century computer pioneer, Charles Babbage. "Trimmers" clip bits off some results and stick them on to others to make things look tidier. "Cooks" serve up only the choicest morsels from their results and forget the rest. The "forger" "simply records observations he has never made". Though, Babbage adds, such instances are rare.

Actually, the above book states they are not as rare as all that. It details scientific frauds from the Egyptian astronomer Ptolomey (accused of appropriating the observations of others) onwards and argues it is not a matter of a few bad apples in the barrel but of a badly contaminated barrel.

Science, the authors, William Broad and Nicholas Wade, allege, has been corrupted by careerism, the rush to get into print, to gain appointments and research grants, elitism and the struggle for status and power. For every major fraud uncovered, they guess, 10 000 major and minor ones go undetected.

Main features of the human skull

Given the total number of scientists past and present, the number of frauds discussed by Broad and Wade is not large. The list at the back of their book covers only 34. But these giants, according to Broad and Wade, "lied for truth" and so got away with it.

The book's main argument is based on a series of recent, mainly American cases of fraud. The authors cite, for example, the case of Mark Spector, who, as a biochemist at Cornell University, electrified the world of cancer research in 1980 by producing a theory on the origins of the disease apparently supported by a series of elegant experiments.

The fact that the experiments were not detected as fraudulent straight away is cited as proof of the falsity of one of the most cherished ideas about science — that it has a built-in mechanism for correcting errors since important experiments always have to be replicated before they are accepted.

Yet, contrary to the book's thesis, Spector did come under suspicion and was eventually unmasked precisely because others could not get experiments similar to his to work. His rise and fall covered less than two years.

Two notorious British frauds, however, took a good deal longer to uncover.

The first was Piltdown man which was not detected as fraudulent for half a century.

But, by its nature, the discovery was not replicable, and the methods used eventually to prove the fraud were not available at the time. Moreover, from the start there were strong suspicions. One early sceptic, Martin Hinton, tried to expose the suspected hoax by ridicule: he carved an elephant bone into a shape like a cricket bat and buried it at the Piltdown site. The bat was discovered and described in a learned journal as the heads of research teams and their subordinates.

Take, for example, the case of William Summerlin. Summerlin, perhaps through an honest mistake, claimed to have made a discovery in immunology with major implications for transplant surgery. Others were unable to repeat it but, in the meantime, Summerlin's chief, Robert Good, the high-powered director of the Sloan Kettering Institute in New York, had announced the "breakthrough" to the press. Summerlin, under enormous pressure to justify himself and his chief, was caught inking black patches onto a white mouse in the hope of passing it off as a skin graft. Good's role came in for much criticism.

the senior lost rather than gained prestige by adding his name to his subordinate's. Though nobody suggested he was aware of the plagiarism, Felig's reputation suffered seriously when it was finally exposed.

But eminent scientists are not convinced by the book's main thesis. "The idea that the occasional fraud shows that the whole of science is flawed is a complete misunderstanding", says Professor John Ziman of Imperial College in London, one of the first people to make a systematic study of the subject. "Ninety per cent of perfectly honest scientific papers are not worth the paper they're written on anyway, because of the errors and confusion inevitable in science."

And, given that science does not have a system designed specifically to sniff out deliberate and cunning fraud, its record does not seem too bad. Broad and Wade make no case at all for their 10 000 undetected frauds for every one uncovered. "Science cannot proceed on a basis of mutual suspicion", Sir Peter Medawar says. "Scientists tend to believe each other, just like most people."

In connection with not only frauds but forgeries and other "tricks" played upon an unsuspecting public the cassette* The Pen and The Sword falls into this category.

Unquestionably — there is a need for true education and understanding and this cassette is well worth listening to by all concerned readers. ■ an important Palaeolithic relic.

The case of educational psychologist Sir Cyril Burt was more serious. His work on the heritability of IQ had a strong impact on educational policy, yet some of it was undoubtedly fabricated and remained undetected for 20 years.

But again, the Burt case is hardly typical. His studies were extraordinarily difficult to replicate because of the experimental material required: identical twins reared apart. And psychology is a notoriously imprecise science.

Broad and Wade are on firmer ground when they get to the murky area of relations between

The dubious practice whereby department heads put their names on papers to which they have made no direct contribution has also led to some of the dirt in fraud cases rubbing off on them — as in the case of Vijay Soman, an Indian scientist working in America.

Soman's crime was to plagiarise a paper passed on to him for vetting for a learned journal by his chief at Yale, Philip Felig. Soman was working in the same field and hastily fabricated a paper with phoney results to gain priority. Felig's name also appeared on it, according to the custom of many big laboratories. But in this case

From the Research Department

“Enquire, I pray thee, of the LORD for us; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us; if so be that the Lord will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us” (Jer. 21).

The story told in Jeremiah is one of disobedient leaders and a disobedient nation. A nation which had entirely ignored the Law of the Lord and as a result had to face the consequence. The cry was “Wherefore hath the LORD done thus . . . ?” Why does He not save us? After all, we are His people! And the answer was (and still is today) “Because they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them” (Jer. 22:9). Thus, the weapons of war — in many forms — are aimed at the people and in their arrogance they blame The Almighty even while they moan and weep at the misfortune they face. Demanding that He must save them somehow or other. What they are not prepared to do however, is consider what the Lord demands of them. The keeping of His Law which they had covenanted to do. And as of old, so today when the nation is far too sophisticated to accept that a Law, made hundreds of years ago could possibly be affective especially in the light of all the modern technological “know how” now available.

WEAPONS OF WAR

Incidentally, a look at the word sophisticated in any dictionary will show just how warped the idea of man's superiority really is. The Reader's Digest Great Encyclopaedic Dictionary stating of the verb sophisticate: 1) Adulterate; falsify; tamper with, corrupt; spoil; by admixture of baser principle or quality. 2) Make artificial; deprive of simplicity; make worldly wise which surely explains exactly what the position is today within the nation which has indeed become sophisticated — adulterated, false, corrupt and spoilt by an admixture of baser principles, etc., etc. And even if the Identity Message is denied with people preferring to be called merely a Christian meanwhile believing the Law of the Lord was done away with and all are now under "grace" and all must love one another for God is a God of love above all else — there is still something very wrong somewhere. For there is no peace and all live in fear in a very troubled world. Strange things are happening and madmen are now indeed in control. "Nebuchadrezzar King of Babylon maketh war against us . . ." And the Lord states of this: "And I myself will fight against you with an outstretched hand and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath . . . Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death." But still the people will not listen. And there should be no surprise when the enemies within the nation and those without, work for its destruction. The nation has worshipped other gods, and served them and so must face the consequence.

■ Weatherwar Devastation

In August 1975, the now defunct South African journal, To The Point, under the heading of Science and Technology, noted that while Russian and American fears were growing about each other's advancement in methods of meteorological warfare, military opinion in South Africa believed that although the new "weather weapon" could be used effectively in Southern Africa's "liberation" struggles, there was little likelihood of that happening, at least in the near future. That was eight years ago.

According to the article, African countries are particularly vulnerable because of their dependence on the weather, as the droughts in large parts of the continent illustrate. Changes in the weather, such as artificially-created droughts, could unstabilise economies, while in some parts, particularly the extensive desert areas, floods could cause untold destruction. But in its present stage of development, meteorological warfare is still a two-edged sword that could have serious comebacks for any nation that may utilise it. There is always a large margin of error and, for this reason, local military circles believed that the "weather weapon" could be used only in circumstances of protracted hostility, rather than in localised direct combat. In any case, its effective use requires a high degree of advanced technology; and for the present at least, South Africa is probably the only country on the continent which might have that technological capability.

Three points in the above paragraph have been noted in italics, (a) droughts in large parts of the African continent — (at present in Southern Africa); (b) meteorological warfare could have serious comebacks for any nation that may utilise it and (c) a high degree of advanced technology is required with South Africa probably the only country on the continent which might have that technological capability.

Tackling (c) first, for the obvious reason that a serious drought does exist, it is certainly not public knowledge as to whether in fact South Africa has made advances in the field of weather-weapons to the point of actually using these. Unquestionably the country has made tremendous strides — often setting the pace — in technological advancement in many fields and it is a horrifying thought that any technology this country has could possibly be turned against its own people even by mistake although the United States seems to have done just that on several occasions. And not always because of error! Where South Africa is concerned, what is more than possible is that both the U.S.A. and the Soviets have been having more than a little "fun" with this part of the world. After all, it was Zbigniew Brzezinski, National Security Director to Jimmy Carter, who wrote in Between Two Ages (1970) that: "Technology will make available to the leaders of major nations a variety of techniques for conducting secret warfare, of which only a bare minimum of the security forces need be appraised... Techniques of weather modification could be employed to produce prolonged drought or storm, thereby weakening a nation's capacity and forcing it to accept the demands of the competitor."

In 1976, the author Lowell Ponte, in his book The Cooling, revealed numerous Soviet plans for warming up the U.S.S.R. such as pushing cold Siberian weather down toward the United States. However, he also reported on joint U.S.-Soviet secret plans to create a Bering Strait Dam. "The United States and the Soviet Union laid plans for a series of experiments near the North Pole, the results of which would be used for evaluating the Bering Dam and other related ideas. The first of these was a joint U.S.-Soviet study of conditions in the Bering Sea, begun in 1972."

Later, in 1974, the then American President, Gerald Ford, together with Henry Kissinger held a Summit Conference with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev in Siberia and there were secret discussions on joint weather modification and other research also covering the proposals to dam the Bering Strait.

WEAPONS OF WAR

appeared in the British Daily Telegraph, August 20, 1983, written by Nigel Wade in Moscow.

According to Mr. Wade, ecological catastrophe has struck the Aral Sea, the world's fourth-biggest lake, which is drying up so rapidly that Soviet scientists expect it to divide into two bodies of water.

The sea has receded more than 30 miles from its shores of 20 years ago and has dropped in average depth from about 80ft. to 30ft. Mud islands and salty shoals have appeared.

Scientists predict that the surface area of 25 000 square miles will decrease by half by the century's end and the volume by two-thirds. It is expected that when the Aral Sea divides into two lakes, one will be about 10 times bigger than the other.

The Aral Sea as it now exists will disappear, and it will no longer moderate the surrounding climate of Central Asia. Frosts are expected to occur later in spring, and autumn will come earlier. Dried salt from the salinated water will blow over the surrounding land, making it infertile.

Man has caused the catastrophe. By diverting water from the two rivers feeding the Aral Sea, the Syr Darya and the Amu Darya, water which used to flow into the Aral Sea now goes to irrigate cotton and rice or for the spreading township Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan.

Victoria in Africa. The sharp fall in the water level of the Aral Sea began 20 years ago at about the time the Soviet Government launched a vast development project in the "virgin lands" of Central Asia.

According to scientists quoted in the Soviet Press, a system of dams and sluices will be needed to desalinate the two separate lakes which the Aral Sea is expected to become. Scientists also believe that long-term plans for diverting Siberian rivers from north to south will help prevent surrounding areas from becoming deserts, even if they do not bring enough water to save the Aral Sea itself.

Soviet Press accounts have also expressed concern that the Caspian Sea is gradually shrinking and becoming saltier. Some Soviet studies have concluded that the Aral Sea can justifiably be sacrificed to Central Asia's growing need for irrigation and drinking water. These studies argue that irrigated farming is more profitable than fishing. But other scientists say the Government has a duty to save the Aral Sea. Mr. Boris Samoilenko, of the Kazakhstan Academy of Sciences, wrote in the Kazakh newspaper earlier this year: "It is not yet possible to assess fully the natural and economic consequence of the sea's disappearance. Furthermore, our generation's moral responsibility to preserve the unique natural area must be taken into account."

■ "Virgin Lands" Project

Pastures around the Aral Sea have dried out as the water level has receded and reeds now clog vast areas of the shores. The water is becoming increasingly saline, and a fishing industry that once produced 50 000 tons a year no longer exists. Scientists calculate that the Aral Sea now holds more than a billion tons of salt which, as it dries, will be blown away by the wind.

The Aral Sea is the world's fourth biggest lake, after the nearby Caspian Sea, Lake Superior in North America, and Lake

■ The Misuse of Knowledge

Nikola Tesla was, what can only be called, a great inventor for many years ago he devised a system to transmit power using Extremely Low Frequency (ELF) electromagnetic frequencies and with the use of certain of these ELF transmissions the possibility of creating gigantic electromagnetic standing waves which could modify weather patterns became known. In 1976 the Soviet Union began their ELF transmissions and unquestionably there is proof that there were extreme changes in the weather pattern from then onward.

In Canada, a group of scientists led by Dr. Andrew Michrowski monitored the Soviet transmissions with Dr. Michrowski writing in 1978 of the giant standing waves set up by the Soviet Union. "In the case of the winter of 1976-1977, the Soviets have managed to establish terrestrial electric resonance, and then to learn how to establish relatively stable and localised Extremely Low Frequency (ELF) magnetic fields, which were able to hamper or divert the jet stream flow in the Northern Hemisphere . . . In the case of the winter of 1977-1978 . . . the Soviet scientists involved had the ingenious idea of setting up one series of standing columnar waves that extend from the westerly tip of Alaska all the way to Valparaiso, Chile. This columnar wave front projected from near Angarsk, Siberia. It created a world-wide weather modification, in that east of this formation, the weather is drier, and west of it, precipitation is enhanced. As the columnar waves rotate clockwise, the westerly winds are sucked upwards counter-clockwise into the upper atmosphere, while a drag brings air from the upper atmosphere on the opposite side."

Besides Dr. Michrowski there have been numerous "weather experts" remarking on the tremendous contrast in weather and extremes in weather which have, over the past few years, taken place throughout the world often with devastating results.

■ Scientists Baffled

According to an article written by Ian Ball in New York and also printed in The Daily Telegraph, 9th August 1983, coral reefs in widely scattered areas of the Pacific and parts of the Western Atlantic are dying for reasons yet to be established. American scientists have suggested that the most extensive reef devastation in modern times may be taking place.

The evidence of dead or dying corals is being collected by oceanographers and reef specialists in such areas as Indonesia, the Philippines, the Gulf of Panama, the Pacific Coast of Columbia, Tahiti and other parts of the South Seas, the Galapagos Islands and the San Blas Islands off Panama's Atlantic coast. The experts have advanced a variety of theories to explain the devastation, including chemical pollution, global weather changes, sewage dumping and oceanic aberrations. But they agreed that the reason for the extermination of the top, living layer of thousands of square miles of coral reefs remains a mystery.

■ Slow Growth

"The situation is very complicated" was the understatement offered by Dr. Peter Glynn, the Smithsonian Institution research biologist who is co-ordinating the search for the cause of the reef destruction.

The reefs are important to man in many ways: they provide shelter and feeding grounds for fish; protect coastal areas from waves and storms; and harbour unique organisms, some of which are harvested for medical substances. The present threat to the coral beds is unrelated to the destruction of hundreds of square miles of Australia's 1 200-mile-long Great Barrier Reef and coral structures off Guam, Saipan, Fiji and the Western Solomon Islands in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

This devastation was carried out by a plague of Crown-of-Thorns, starfish which prey on the coral polyps. The invading starfish have since retreated and the reefs have begun the slow process of restoring themselves.

Coral colonies can create vast underwater structures, expanding them at the rate of about 3ft. every 1 000 years.

There are some 2 500 known species of corals, most of them omnivorous polyps, invertebrate marine animals about a sixteenth of an inch long that secrete forms of calcium carbonate around their bodies.

Dr. Glynn has speculated that a variety of factors, linked to the Pacific weather system had warmed tropical waters to temperatures that the corals cannot tolerate.

■ Man's Faults

Man is also the villain in part of the reef devastation.

A few dead coral samples from Panamanian reefs were found to contain above-normal levels of dioxins from herbicides used in Central American cattle-raising areas. In a few scattered areas, coral mortality has been attributed to toxic run-offs from pesticide-laden streams, the dumping of sewage and the accumulation of silt from harbour dredging.

But most of the research being conducted in the Western Atlantic and the Pacific is exploring the link between the dead and dying reefs and a cyclical reversal of wind and water currents in the Pacific. The phenomenon has also affected weather in the Atlantic and Indian Oceans.

The current abnormal weather conditions over the Pacific are considered the most severe manifestation of the reversal in this century. The first real signs of coral devastation were observed late in the winter and early spring, the period when the freak winds and unusually warm ocean temperatures were being recorded in the Pacific.

"The south-western trade winds almost stopped blowing," said Dr. Glynn. "As a result the water level in the central Pacific did not pile up as usual and became comparatively low." Among the many consequences of that, the water was warmer than usual to the eastern Pacific.

The evidence that there has been a disastrous world-wide "weather" plan in operation for some time continues to mount and there is evidence too that the United States is very greatly involved in the manipulation. A newsletter issued in January 1980 by the Planetary Association for Clean Energy (P.A.C.E.) stated that in 1979 the United States government joined the Soviet Union in transmitting ELF weather modifying signals. The U.S. government ELF signals are in the 15 Hertz and 30 Hertz frequencies and the American ELF signals are more powerful than those from the Soviet Union and appear to include a standing columnar wave, concentric subsidiary standing wave formations, plus a movable component. "The U.S. ELF emission system excites the earth's core and the ionosphere — probably using the Magnifying Transmitter principles of Nikola Tesla, combined with microwave technology for beaming to and beyond the ionosphere."

Nikola Tesla was issued U.S. Letters Patent No. 787,412 on April 18, 1905, titled Stationary Waves Impressed Upon The Earth Through Apparatus For Transmission of Electrical Energy. Amongst other data Tesla's patent stated: "... the planet behaves like a perfectly smooth or polished conductor of inappreciable resistance with capacity and self-induction uniformly distributed along the axis of symmetry of wave propagation and transmitting slow electrical oscillations without sensible distortion and attenuation ..."

However, it also stated: "... By impressing upon the earth two or more oscillations of different wave length, a resultant stationary wave may be made to travel slowly over the globe, and thus a great variety of useful effects may be produced ... (and) ... If several such generators of stationary waves, preferably of different length, were installed in judiciously-selected localities, the entire globe could be subdivided in definite zones of electric activity ..."

There is of course, a great deal more evidence available concerning the manipulation of the weather throughout the entire world and from time to time, the Federation's Research Department will be advising readers concerning its findings. Meanwhile, it is interesting to note that the July/August 1980, P.A.C.E. newsletter stated: "The combination of high intensity ELF magnetic signals from both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R.

... (are) ... significant enough to produce effects on humans as well as other living systems. Such effects, when they exist, would not normally be perceived by the individuals affected, because the electrical activity of the central nervous system would be altered. Since human perception is a direct result of the chemical and electrical activity of the brain, one would not normally be able to determine whether perception has been altered."

And yet, the warning was sounded to the nation and their leaders many, many years ago: "And I will prepare destroyers against thee, everyone with his weapons..." Many will ask why the LORD would do this to His People with the answer clearly given: "... Because they have forsaken the Covenant of the LORD their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them."

Finally, after reading the above it may be felt that man's technology has caught up and possibly outstripped the Power of the Almighty. So there is really nothing to worry about. In this context it is well to remember the story of the drying up of the Aral Sea — in spite of all the Soviets can do. Man's knowledge, no matter how "advanced", is still a puny thing and this is proved over and over again. For instance, a report to hand has revealed that there is evidence of another planetary system in existence. It seems the Milky Way star Vega is surrounded by a giant disc or shell of material. Apparently the mystery of Vega is beyond the reach of earth-based telescopes. Even with their advanced new tools for probing the universe, astronomers are unable to determine the size of the array of objects swirling around Vega.

So man still does not know everything!

What shall we eat?

The recent articles on the "Egyptian Diseases" (Covenant Message July, Aug., Sept. 1983) show distinct proofs of the consequences of disobedience of Law. Most noteworthy Laws are those contained in Leviticus 11 (please study Covenant Message, Sept. 1983), which Christians just can not understand. The fact is that the PENALTY of disobedience is still in FULL effect today. So while Christians love to squabble over futile virtues of pig meat, their attention will never be drawn to vital principles such as those contained in Deut. 7: up to verse 8, Deut. 23:2, Lev. 19:19 and Exodus 23:19.

Not only is the eating of wrong things the cause of disease, but MIXING of right foods is equally serious. This series is going to prove that MIXING is wrong and as a bonus pointers for good health will be given.

From the physical standpoint good health depends on the normal circulation of pure, chemically balanced blood throughout the body. Circulation depends on good heart and respiratory function and the state of the blood is decided by nutrition. Hence the saying one frequently reads in health literature, "Nutrition is the physical basis of Life." All organs have to be properly nourished in order to be healthy.

The body is continually changing, so why not make this constant change one for the better by living and eating within the Law? You MUST change! This surely means that an organ, such as a diseased heart, may be literally RENEWED by means of correct nutrition! Diseased cells are being constantly renewed along with healthy cells, and it is logical, by supplying the right elements, cells that are weak can be strengthened during the process of renewal. It has been estimated that almost 100 per cent of the body is replaced every year.

Before finding out what to eat, learn How to eat. Rule One is an emphatic, "Eat only when hungry, and enjoy the food." Food taken when not hungry will not do any good or supply much nourishment! Always be happy at the meal table, for a happy state results in a good digestion; happiness is a great health aid, anyway! At times, one meal a day will be enough for you. Then again, you will experience phases where you will be hungry constantly. Please learn to live with yourself and yield to the requirements of your body. Eat when hungry!

Foods, like fuels, belong to type groups and as such should be used strictly for the purpose intended. For example, petrol and diesel are two types of similar fuel. Petrol and diesel MIXED will surely condemn the digestion of your car! What of the different food-groups and your body? Let us now separate and group the CLEAN foods and put a stop to MIXING.

a) Meat i.e. beef, mutton (not lamb), goat and antelope as instructed at Leviticus 11 and fully described in the Covenant Message of Sept. 1983.

Exclude the blood, brains, lungs, heart, stomach, intestine, liver, kidneys, bone marrow and pancreas. Trim the fat from the meat.

b) Birds as set out in the above references.

c) Fish as similarly instructed.

d) Cheese. Clean cheese and cottage cheese are natural. Other rennet formed cheeses should be used in moderation. Such cheese should be grated and spread out on a dish to dry for at least 24 hours before eating. Dried cheese is much easier to digest.

e) Milk, sour milk, thick milk, butter milk and cream.

f) Olives.

g) Soya beans.

h) Avocado pear.

STARCH

a) All grains. Maize, wheat, kaffir corn, rice, barley, rye, millet and oats.

b) Dried beans and dried peas excepting soya beans.

c) Potatoes and sweet potatoes. Potatoes should not be peeled as the minerals in the skin are excellent for the blood. Rich deposits of potassium (kidney food) are just below the skin. WARNING: a green colour below the skin is poisonous.

d) Pumpkin and hubbard squash.

e) Banana. Medium ripe are starch while very ripe are classed under sugar fruits. The best policy is to boycott cancer producing commercial bananas.

f) Dates.

g) Figs. Very ripe figs are classed under sugar fruits.

FATS

Disease producing animal fats, lard, dripping and tallow are excluded.

Edible fats and oils are:

a) Butter and cream

b) Avocado pear

c) Plant oils i.e. olive, soya, sesame, sunflower, maize and peanut.

d) Nuts.

e) White margarine. Yellow is mostly chemical junk.

VEGETABLES

Asparagus, Brocoli, Beetroot (and tops), Bamboo sprouts, Brussel sprout, Chicory, Carrots (and tops), Celery, Cabbage, Collards Cauliflower, Chard, Cow-slip, Chinese Cabbage, Chive, Cucumber (don't peel), Dandelion, Egg-plant, Green maize, Green beans, Green peppers, Garlic, Kale, Kohl-rabi, Lettuce, Leek, Mustard, Okra, Onions, Parsley, Rape, Radish (and tops), Rhubarb, Spinach, Sorrel, Squash, Turnips (and tops), NOTE: Raw green leaves contain blood building substances.

WARNING: Once cooked, these same substances poison the blood-forming bone marrow!

ACID FRUITS

Grapefruit, Lemon, Lime, Orange (sour), Pineapple, Pomegranate, Tomato,

SUGAR FRUITS

Apple, Apricot, Cherry, Mango, Peach, Pear, Plum, Grapes, Loquat, Lichi, Passion fruit, Naartjie (sweet), Orange (sweet) Paw paw,

MELONS

Watermelon, Muskmelon,

The above groupings are based upon the principles of biology. If the physiology of digestion can lead us to eating habits that insure correct digestion, hence CORRECT HEALTH, only very foolish goyim will disregard the foregoing groupings. Each of the groups have characteristics which do not combine with each other.

DO NOT MIX ACID FRUIT and STARCH.

Saliva contains ptyalin which is a starch-splitting enzyme. This action is carried out further by the action of amylase (from the pancreas). A weak acid solution inhibits ptyalin. Therefore, without the action of ptyalin, the pancreas will be under a greater burden and thus eventually weaken (or be at dis-ease). Eat acid fruits and starches at separate meals.

DO NOT MIX PROTEIN and STARCH.

The stomach secretes an appropriate juice for starch digestion which is different from the juice required for protein digestion. For example, if rice and meat are eaten together, a highly acid juice will be poured out and starch digestion will come to an almost abrupt end. Eat protein foods and starch foods at separate meals.

DO NOT MIX PROTEIN and PROTEIN.

Two proteins of different character call for different modification of the digestive juices and different timing of the secretions. For example, the strongest juice is poured out upon milk in the last hour of digestion, upon meat in the first hour. Eggs receive the strongest secretion at a different time to that by either meat or milk. Is there no significance in the timing thus seen? Do you now have a new understanding of Exodus 23:19? Eat ONE protein at a meal.

DO NOT MIX ACID FRUIT and PROTEIN.

Protein digestion requires pepsin. Fruit acids destroy pepsin which seriously handicaps protein digestion and results in putrefaction. Eat acid fruits and protein at separate meals.

DO NOT MIX FAT and PROTEIN.

Fats inhibit the secretion of gastric juices needed for the digestion of protein. Eat fats and protein at separate meals.

DO NOT MIX SUGAR FRUITS and PROTEIN

Sugar digestion is in the intestine. If they are eaten alone they are not held in the stomach for a long time. When eaten with protein they are held up in the stomach for a prolonged period, awaiting the digestion of the protein. While thus waiting they undergo fermentation. Eat sugar fruits and proteins at separate meals.

DO NOT MIX SUGAR FRUITS and STARCH.

The same principles for sugar/protein applies here. Eat sugar fruits and starch at separate meals.

MELONS DO NOT MIX WITH ANY OTHER GROUP.

Melons move very rapidly from the stomach and through the intestines — passage is much faster than that of fruit. If the speed of their digestive passage is hindered, they are liable to decompose giving rise to much gas and discomfort. Eat melons alone.

MILK

Milk is for babies. The digestive system of babies have the correct stomach/appendix relationship. Due to its protein and fat combination, milk is difficult to digest in adults. Milk combines poorly with starch but not at all with other groups.

Take milk alone or moderately with starch.

HONEY

Although honey is a sugar, no adverse effect has been proven in its combination to any of the basic groups.

SEPARATION OF GROUPS

Foods from various groups have different time requirements. Therefore before changing groups at separate meals allow a sufficient time lapse as indicated:—

Allow 1/2 hour before changing to another group after Melons.

1 hour	Sugar fruits
1 1/2 hours	Acid fruits
2 hours	Vegetables
4 hours	Starches
5 hours	Proteins

Is GOOD HEALTH a worthwhile objective? At the start it is going to be an effort calling for strict discipline to eat correctly within the groups set out in this article.

The articles from next month onwards will teach proven methods of restoring HEALTH.

OF MORE THAN PASSING INTEREST

ONE OF ARCHEOLOGY'S most intriguing discoveries, 2300 year old tomb complex yields splendid relics from the epic age of Philip II of Macedon, father of Alexander the Great. Among the finds: extraordinary Greek wall paintings and a gold casket holding bones that may be those of Philip II.

Philip II, the Macedonian king who conquered most of Greece and was planning to lead an invasion of Asia Minor when he was assassinated in 336 B.C.

The medallion portrait is adorned by a diadem used by Macedonian royalty and much like one from the tomb.
